Early Greek Elections

WASHINGTON, Saturday genete made public a statement yesterday stated that it fully endorsed remarks by the U.S. Ambassador in Athens, John Puerifoy, that the U.S. would welcome early general elections in Greece. The State Department Spokesman sunmarized Mr. Puerifoy's other remarks, made informally at an Athens reception as follows: U.S. aid for 1952-1953 might prove sufficient if a stable government were in power. Deputies elected on Communist-front tickets could not "change their spots" by switching parties.

He added that the State Department fully supported these views.

The Greek Government won a vote of confidence by 137 votes to 113 last night.

The vote ended a five-day debate during which the Greek Rally, led by Marahal Phagos, atlacked the policy of the 16-menth old "Progressive Liberai" contition under General Plastica.

The Rafly accused the Government of bringing the collection of the Progressive Liberai" contition under General Plastica.

diers in the forces for another six months. The demographic figures, which according to Mr. Ben Gurion's declarations compel the army to ask for the new hill, were not disclosed. The House had to take them on trust. It was therefore doubtful if the sixhour debate in the plenary would be more than a formality. As far as fereign policy (which is intimately connected with military preparedness) was concerned there were no new facts or ideas discernible. But the debate did touch on some problems which concern the army. Mr. Livneh had another opportunity to press for publication of the entire defense budget and the debate also brought to the floor some members who dealt with controversial matters, such as compulsory service for women.
